Motions for reconsideration are disfavored. The court will ordinarily deny such motions in the absence of a showing of manifest error in the prior ruling or a showing of new facts or legal authority which could not have been brought to its attention earlier with reasonable diligence. The Ninth Circuit has described reconsideration as an "extraordinary remedy, to be use sparingly in the interests of finality and conservation of judicial resources." Kona Enters., Inc. v. "[A] motion for reconsideration should not be granted, absent highly unusual circumstances, unless the district court is presented with newly discovered evidence, committed clear error, or if there is an intervening change in the controlling law." Id. (quoting 389 Orange Street Partners v. Arnold , 179 F.3d 656, 665 (9th Cir. 1999)). In this case, Northwest requests that the Court reconsider its dismissal of Northwest's claim that BRC plan 2353 does not infringe Northwest's plan 2501/2502. Dkt. 101. 1	improperly relied on an expert declaration to put the claim at issue and "effectively
2	offloaded a vast majority of its argument in order to circumvent the briefing page limit."
3	Dkt. 101 at 3. The number of claims in this case is massive and the questions of
4	copyright law required extensive briefing as well. Once the Court decided the questions
5	of law, it turned to an application of those laws to one of Northwest's claims. The Court
6	cited both parties' experts' reports and thoroughly considered all relevant evidence.
7	Under these circumstances, the Court is unable to conclude that there was anything
8	improper about failing to provide a specific argument for each of Northwest's claims.
9	Therefore, the Court denies Northwest's motion on this issue.
10	Second, Northwest argues that the changes requested by BRC provide direct
11	evidence of copying. The Court cited authorities for and thoroughly explained the legal
12	difference between copying and wrongful copying. Dkt. 100 at 17–19. The fact that
13	BRC made direct alterations to Northwest's work does not show wrongful copying.
14	Therefore, the Court denies Northwest's motion on this issue.
15	Finally, Northwest argues that there are unique similarities between the two
16	works. Dkt. 101 at 6–7. Northwest claims that the two plans share the same angled
17	doorway and other similar external features. Id . The Court previously concluded as
18	follows:
19	Although the Court has found that Northwest has shown some
20	protectable elements in its plan, those indispensable expressions do not outweigh the overwhelming inclusion of nonprotectable elements. Even if BRC had full access to Northwest's plan, this evidence at most proves
21	copying but not wrongful copying. The slight similarities do not pass the
